When the Preface is dropped, the poem seems to compare the act of poetry with the might of Kubla Khan instead of the loss of inspiration causing the work to have a more complex depiction of the poetic power. New York: Viking, Wordsworth's "Poor Susan," from Lyrical Ballads of also describes a caged bird. Lord abides at this Park of his, dwelling sometimes in the Marble Palace and sometimes in the Cane Palace for three months of the year, to wit, June, July, and August; preferring this residence because it is by no means hot; in fact it is a very cool place. Wordsworth's renewed contact with France only confirmed his disillusionment disappointment with the French Revolution and its aftermath.
