Lennie is a victim of this society and time because he is simple minded. Of mice and men. Much of these elements are shown right from the beginning of the chapter when the two men, Lennie and George arrive at the bunk house. George and Lennie had to flee the last town because Lennie touched a woman's dress and he'd been accused of rape. But George also realizes that Lennie cannot remember or follow these simple instructions.

What George does not realize is how potentially dangerous Lennie is. Everything described landscape and the ranch itself, which is near Soledad, south-east of Salinas on the Salinas river, would have been very familiar to Steinbeck, since he grew up there and knew it all his life. Salinas River a river that flows through Soledad and into Monterey Bay.
