Lawassumed command of the division, but confusion as to orders and command status dissipated the direction and strength of the Confederate attack, significantly affecting the outcome of the battle. Despite his two damaged limbs, Hood performed well in the field, riding as much as 20 miles a day without apparent difficulty, strapped to his horse with his artificial leg hanging stiffly, and an orderly following closely behind with crutches. ViewProduct.Jackson was impressed with Hood's performance and recommended his promotion to major general, which occurred effective October 10, Memoirs Alexander, E.
