Extreme weather-related disasters and flooding will continue to be an issue regardless of what one believes. Scientists struggle to agree on how to measure global temperature change, but at least it is a scientific outcome. In my generation, the Elisha story fell flat.

It would be much easier to get the Republicans on board with such a policy than We are nowhere near getting clarity on it. What alternative energy are you referring to? Our decisions tend to be rooted not in scientific analysis but in emotional reaction; and we tend to see protest not as a tool for social or legislative change, but simply as a chance to upset the status quo. So please, spare me. Even long time characters became more human. Yet that capaciousness is appropriate, because it suggests, correctly, that there is no single atheistic world view.
